O Muse! reveal not to the vulgar mind Their sacred thoughts of loveliness refin d, And dream not, breathe not how her virgin love Made tender feelings in her bosom move, Nor how his soul, enlarged with hope of pelf, Swelled high in conscious worship of himself. Lo! how their hands in friendly trust they clasp, What whole orations lie within the grasp! And who but envied, as with joy elate High on the bubble throne they took their state? Attendant lies are buzzing all about And thick ning hiss amid the eager rout, As locusts gathering o er the desert swell So clouds of falsehoods flutter up from hell, And all declare th elected chief a saint, And all his mind in glowing colours paint. Some said that he was Honour s only child, Spotless and pure, untroubled, unbeguil d, And that he came to make a lasting peace With Avarice, that for ever should not cease--Some that he was a messenger from heaven To work great wonders in her favour given That he had come to certify her reign, To prove all faith, and all religion, vain--That men, set free, might be deceived no more By any creed that recognized the poor--And to create an era on the earth, Erecting gold as the one thing of worth. But in the midst of these surmises true, Arising...
