He asks that Gilbert s sarsephrase be seized, because I have a pntiut that all shipp and goods are confiscate that shall trade ther without my leve. That he had given such leave, has hitherto been assumed, because Brereton (see Purchas s Pil/nnt and Mass. Hist. Coll., vol. viii., Third Series), addresses his narrative of the voyage to Sir Walter Raleigh. Brereton s own words, however, make it plain that he did so ouly as a matter of courtesy. took with him thirty-two persons, of whom twenty were to remain and found a colony somewhere on the northern coast of Vir-voyage of ginia, as the whole country was then called, from the thirty-Bartholo fourth to the forty-fifth parallel of latitude. His purpose was to go by a direct northwest course, avoiding the usual circuitous route by the Canaries and the West...
