In His Name: Some people can justify anything in His name, even murder! Stephen believes hes a Christian. To prove it, he works very hard to make sure everything he does is sanctioned by Gods Word, the Bible. Even when he kills people, he assures himself by scripture that God approves. Even so, he runs afoul of a New York crime family, and runs to a small town where he believes hes safe. But before you know it, hes back to old habits. But even through all this, God is at work in the hearts of the local, single pastor and one of Stephens intended victims, and within a stunning moment when God works deeply in the hearts of those He saves, one as urgent and timely as the thief on the cross. . . . With Good . . . Be Done. : A decidedly blatant (and proud of it) prolife play. . . . Be Done . . . With Good, through saved and unsaved lives, examines the hard, emotional choices that women and their men, both adults and teens, are forced to make when faced with an unwanted pregnancy. Through it all runs Candys story. Married to John whos been in Afghanistan for eleven months, she works as a counselor at the pro-life clinic for Johns mother, Marge, whose ministry it is. At a moment of anger and weakness, Candy becomes pregnant and finds out the day she also finds out her physically and emotionally wounded husband is on the way home. What will she do What will Marge do when shes told that a severe emotional shock like this could permanently disable her son As the stories...
